Broadcasting the story After the success of the movie Warriors, Hollywood looked to embrace the concept of a youth gang and sell it to television. In 1981, Swayze made a TV show, Return of the Rebels, about an aging motorcycle gang that come together to help a friend who owns a popular campsite that is threatened by a group of arrogant groupies. However, the show didn't catch on and was quickly canceled. Team brother Lawrence and Gordon tried to sell Swayze's rebel look, combine the concept of a gang with a police angle and came up with the Renegades. Roger Spottiswood was the pilot of the television film, which first aired on August 11, 1982, and the six-episode series was later aired in 1983. He had weak ratings and ABC canceled the show.
