

Snow crash deliverator

I'm not a robot
reCAPTCHA

Continue

Toggle Nav Hiro is nothing if not hardcore. His stay as a pizza delivery, no. Deliverator... Y.T. If skateboarding were something you could get graded on, Y.T. would graduate at the top of it... Raven, aka Dmitry Ravinov, when Raven meets with I.T. and presents himself as an aleut, she has not heard of this ethnic group,... Juanita Marquez Because she has developed a way to face work in the Metaverse, Juanita can be considered one of his... L.A. Bob Rife This communications monopolist is something of a mystery at first sight: He's super rich, puts a lot... Uncle EnzoPublic image is very important to Uncle Enzo. In fact, our first glimpse of it on... Lagos, Dr. Emanuel Library of Congress/CIC researcher, Lagos is mostly in love with information. It's encoded... Y.T. momAs single mother, mom Y.T. works all the time. This is largely because it works on... NgThe head of honcho ng Security Industries is a Vietnamese man who looks completely different... Mr. LIM; Lee's face wildly grinning (12.97) has become an icon for those who visit and do business... Da5id Meyer-Hiro buddy, and owner of the black sun metropolis hacker, Da5id is a guy who knows where he is... Fisheye We never know this dude's name, but he looks like someone you don't want to mess with. His costume... Elliot Chung-he starts as skipper Kowloon, but when the Crown force him on a lifeboat with him... VicOne of the Mafia guys end up on a lifeboat with Hiro, Vic is a low-key, unobtrusive (48.2)... Vitaly Chernobyl/Vlray, named after the Chernobyl crisis, leads a group called... Jason Breckinridge (Iron Pump) This jacket worn by Mafia goon is not the brightest pencil in the box, although he manages Nova... The Librarian This computer program (or daemon) was created to remind and act as a person to... FidoY.T. and her boyfriend Roadkill rescued Fido (a bull rottie) when a jerk shot him in the leg... Small Characters The boss of local security guards, Squeaky is a small, fat black guy, a... Join today and never see them again. When you enter your email address, you agree to receive emails from Shmoop and check that you are over 13 years old. To switch Nav Chapter 1 before the chapter actually begins, we get a dictionary-style definition of the words snow, crash and virus. Yay Also, just to point out, Stevenson is an extremely entertaining author, prone to multi-complex fits of metaphorical fantasy that make his prose as amusing as watching a drunken penguin try to tap-dance. We're smart, but not smart enough to condense his style into a brief summary of the chapter, so, well, deal with it. Now on: We meet Deliverator, in his black armored suit, speeding through Los Angeles in his high-tech car. Deliverator's work is dangerous and requires precision; when they first gave it to him which they gave him a gun to go with him, in case customers get uppity. But he prefers his swords. Anyways, this is America, where everything arms, and everyone expects their pizzas on time. Because that, friends, is what Deliverator does: he's a pizza delivery guy. America both went down and gone crazy, so it does only four things worth noting: music, movies, software, and high-speed pizza delivery. Deliverator (whose name is Hiro btw) works for CosaNostra Pizza, which is run by the Mafia. Uncle Enzo, the boss, will come and personally apologize for any pizza delivered in more than thirty minutes, and no deliveryman will want to know what happens to who will wash away this delivery. It's a nightmare. We learn that Deliverator was once a security dude in Burbclave, which is a suburb that is also a city-state (meaning he has his own schools, police forces, and such). Apparently his use of samurai swords at work doesn't go well, which is another reason he's currently flying pies for Mafia. The Deliverator swings in the store for a few more pizzas to deliver that night. Smoke comes out of the store, which is a bad sign; The guy inside, who barely speaks English, gives him only one pie, but the timer on his e-box reads twenty minutes. This means that Deliverator has exactly ten minutes to deliver pizza to an address twelve miles away, otherwise. Join today and never see them again. When you enter your email address, you agree to receive emails from Shmoop and check that you are over 13 years old. To switch Nav Chapter 1 before the chapter actually begins, we get a dictionary-style definition of the words snow, crash and virus. Tribal Pizza Carpenter for Snow Crash Delivery Vehicles Articles Related to Gyro-X Self-Balancing Vehicle Ford SafeCap, opposite Niven and Barnes' Napcap Tesla Roadster Plus SpaceX Thrusters Equal Rocket Car Want to Contribute Item? It's simple: get the title of the subject, the quote, the title of the book and the author's name, and add it here. Excerpts from Neil Stevenson, Snow Crash (NY 1992) page 1-18Note: this excerpt appears here in accordance with the doctrine of fair use. It is solely for educational purposes by students at George Mason University in History 120 and cannot be reproduced or copied to any other website. Chapter One Liberation belongs to the elite order, the sacred subcategory. He's got an espyte. Now he is preparing to perform his third mission in a night. Its shape is black, like activated charcoal, filtering very light out of the air. The bullet will bounce off his arachnofiber weave like a wren hitting the patio door, but excess sweat is brought through like it a breeze through a freshly squeezed forest. Where his body has bony limbs, the suit is baked: feels like a gummy jelly, protects like a stack of phone books. When they gave him a job, they gave him a gun. Deliverator never deals with cash, but someone can come for it anyway, perhaps wanting his car, or his cargo. Pistol is tiny, aero-style, lightweight, the kind of gun the fashion designer will carry; It shoots teenage darts that fly at a speed five times the SR-71 spy plane, and when you get done with it, you have to plug it into the lighter because it runs on electricity. Deliverator never pulled that gun in anger, or in fear. He pulled it once to Gila Highlands. Some punks in Gila Highlands, the quirky Burbclave, wanted to deliver themselves, and they didn't want to pay for it. Thought they would impress Deliverator with a baseball bat. Deliverator pulled out a gun, centered on his laser doohickey on what was ready for the Louisville Slugger, fired. The recoil was enormous, as if the weapon had exploded in his hand. The middle third of the baseball bat turned into a column of burning sawdust, accelerating in all directions like a burst star. Punk ended up holding this bat handle with milk smoke pouring out the end. A stupid look took his face. Got nothing but trouble from Deliverator. Since then, Deliverator has kept the gun in the glove compartment and relied instead on a co-planted set of samurai swords that have always been his weapon of choice anyway. Punks in Gila Highlands were not afraid of a gun, so Deliverator was forced to use it. But swords don't need demonstrations. The Deliverator car has enough potential energy packed into its batteries to fire a pound of bacon into the asteroid belt. Unlike a bimbo box or a Burb beater, the Deliverator car unleashes this power through gaping, shiny, polished spinthers... Do you want to talk contact patches? Your car's tires have tiny contact spots, talk to asphalt in four places the size of a tongue. The Deliverator car has large sticky tires with contact spots the size of a fat lady's thigh. Deliverator is in contact with the road, starts as a bad day, stops at the peseta. As he scrunches to a halt, the electromechanical hatch on the flank of his car is already opening to reveal its empty pizza slots, the door tapping and folding back on itself like a wing beetle. Slots are waiting. Waiting for a hot pizza. From the Snow Crash, Neil Stevenson. Published by Bantam in 1992 Additional resources: More ideas and Technologies Neil Stevenson Tech news articles related to Snow Crash More ideas and Technologies Neil Stevenson Tech news articles related to the works of Neil Stevenson Deliverator Car Related News Articles: - Tribal Pizza Carpenter for Snow Crash Delivery Vehicles Articles Related to Gyro-X Self-Balancing Vehicle Ford SafeCap, opposite Niven and Barnes' Napcap Tesla Roadster Plus SpaceX Thrusters Equal Rocket Car Want to Contribute Item? It's simple: get the title of the subject, the quote, the title of the book and the author's name, and add it here. Excerpts from Neil Stevenson, Snow Crash (NY 1992) page 1-18Note: this excerpt appears here in accordance with the doctrine of fair use. It is solely for educational purposes by students at George Mason University in History 120 and cannot be reproduced or copied to any other website. Chapter One Liberation belongs to the elite order, the sacred subcategory. He's got an espyte. Now he is preparing to perform his third mission in a night. Its shape is black, like activated charcoal, filtering very light out of the air. The bullet will bounce off his arachnofiber weave like a wren hitting the patio door, but excess sweat is brought through like it a breeze through a freshly squeezed forest. Where his body has bony limbs, the suit is baked: feels like a gummy jelly, protects like a stack of phone books. When they gave him a job, they gave him a gun. Deliverator never deals with cash, but someone can come for it anyway, perhaps wanting his car, or his cargo. Pistol is tiny, aero-style, lightweight, the kind of gun the fashion designer will carry; It shoots teenage darts that fly at a speed five times the SR-71 spy plane, and when you get done with it, you have to plug it into the lighter because it runs on electricity. Deliverator never pulled that gun in anger, or in fear. He pulled it once to Gila Highlands. Some punks in Gila Highlands, the quirky Burbclave, wanted to deliver themselves, and they didn't want to pay for it. Thought they would impress Deliverator with a baseball bat. Deliverator pulled out a gun, centered on his laser doohickey on what was ready for the Louisville Slugger, fired. The recoil was enormous, as if the weapon had exploded in his hand. The middle third of the baseball bat turned into a column of burning sawdust, accelerating in all directions like a burst star. Punk ended up holding this bat handle with milk smoke pouring out the end. A stupid look took his face. Got nothing but trouble from Deliverator. Since then, Deliverator has kept the gun in the glove compartment and relied instead on a co-planted set of samurai swords that have always been his weapon of choice anyway. Punks in Gila Highlands were not afraid of a gun, so Deliverator was forced to use it. But swords don't need demonstrations. The Deliverator car has enough potential energy packed into its batteries to fire a pound of bacon into the asteroid belt. Unlike a bimbo box or a Burb beater, the Deliverator car unleashes this power through gaping, shiny, polished spinthers... Do you want to talk contact patches? Your car's tires have tiny contact spots, talk to asphalt in four places the size of a tongue. The Deliverator car has large sticky tires with contact spots the size of a fat lady's thigh. Deliverator is in contact with the road, starts as a bad day, stops at the peseta. As he scrunches to a halt, the electromechanical hatch on the flank of his car is already opening to reveal its empty pizza slots, the door tapping and folding back on itself like a wing beetle. Slots are waiting. Waiting for a hot pizza. From the Snow Crash, Neil Stevenson. Published by Bantam in 1992 Additional resources: More ideas and Technologies Neil Stevenson Tech news articles related to Snow Crash More ideas and Technologies Neil Stevenson Tech news articles related to the works of Neil Stevenson Deliverator Car Related News Articles: - Tribal Pizza Carpenter for Snow Crash Delivery Vehicles Articles Related to Gyro-X Self-Balancing Vehicle Ford SafeCap, opposite Niven and Barnes' Napcap Tesla Roadster Plus SpaceX Thrusters Equal Rocket Car Want to Contribute Item? It's simple: get the title of the subject, the quote, the title of the book and the author's name, and add it here. Excerpts from Neil Stevenson, Snow Crash (NY 1992) page 1-18Note: this excerpt appears here in accordance with the doctrine of fair use. It is solely for educational purposes by students at George Mason University in History 120 and cannot be reproduced or copied to any other website. Chapter One Liberation belongs to the elite order, the sacred subcategory. He's got an espyte. Now he is preparing to perform his third mission in a night. Its shape is black, like activated charcoal, filtering very light out of the air. The bullet will bounce off his arachnofiber weave like a wren hitting the patio door, but excess sweat is brought through like it a breeze through a freshly squeezed forest. Where his body has bony limbs, the suit is baked: feels like a gummy jelly, protects like a stack of phone books. When they gave him a job, they gave him a gun. Deliverator never deals with cash, but someone can come for it anyway, perhaps wanting his car, or his cargo. Pistol is tiny, aero-style, lightweight, the kind of gun the fashion designer will carry; It shoots teenage darts that fly at a speed five times the SR-71 spy plane, and when you get done with it, you have to plug it into the lighter because it runs on electricity. Deliverator never pulled that gun in anger, or in fear. He pulled it once to Gila Highlands. Some punks in Gila Highlands, the quirky Burbclave, wanted to deliver themselves, and they didn't want to pay for it. Thought they would impress Deliverator with a baseball bat. Deliverator pulled out a gun, centered on his laser doohickey on what was ready for the Louisville Slugger, fired. The recoil was enormous, as if the weapon had exploded in his hand. The middle third of the baseball bat turned into a column of burning sawdust, accelerating in all directions like a burst star. Punk ended up holding this bat handle with milk smoke pouring out the end. A stupid look took his face. Got nothing but trouble from Deliverator. Since then, Deliverator has kept the gun in the glove compartment and relied instead on a co-planted set of samurai swords that have always been his weapon of choice anyway. Punks in Gila Highlands were not afraid of a gun, so Deliverator was forced to use it. But swords don't need demonstrations. The Deliverator car has enough potential energy packed into its batteries to fire a pound of bacon into the asteroid belt. Unlike a bimbo box or a Burb beater, the Deliverator car unleashes this power through gaping, shiny, polished spinthers... Do you want to talk contact patches? Your car's tires have tiny contact spots, talk to asphalt in four places the size of a tongue. The Deliverator car has large sticky tires with contact spots the size of a fat lady's thigh. Deliverator is in contact with the road, starts as a bad day, stops at the peseta. As he scrunches to a halt, the electromechanical hatch on the flank of his car is already opening to reveal its empty pizza slots, the door tapping and folding back on itself like a wing beetle. Slots are waiting. Waiting for a hot pizza. From the Snow Crash, Neil Stevenson. Published by Bantam in 1992 Additional resources: More ideas and Technologies Neil Stevenson Tech news articles related to Snow Crash More ideas and Technologies Neil Stevenson Tech news articles related to the works of Neil Stevenson Deliverator Car Related News Articles: - Tribal Pizza Carpenter for Snow Crash Delivery Vehicles Articles Related to Gyro-X Self-Balancing Vehicle Ford SafeCap, opposite Niven and Barnes' Napcap Tesla Roadster Plus SpaceX Thrusters Equal Rocket Car Want to Contribute Item? It's simple: get the title of the subject, the quote, the title of the book and the author's name, and add it here. Excerpts from Neil Stevenson, Snow Crash (NY 1992) page 1-18Note: this excerpt appears here in accordance with the doctrine of fair use. It is solely for educational purposes by students at George Mason University in History 120 and cannot be reproduced or copied to any other website. Chapter One Liberation belongs to the elite order, the sacred subcategory. He's got an espyte. Now he is preparing to perform his third mission in a night. Its shape is black, like activated charcoal, filtering very light out of the air. The bullet will bounce off his arachnofiber weave like a wren hitting the patio door, but excess sweat is brought through like it a breeze through a freshly squeezed forest. Where his body has bony limbs, the suit is baked: feels like a gummy jelly, protects like a stack of phone books. When they gave him a job, they gave him a gun. Deliverator never deals with cash, but someone can come for it anyway, perhaps wanting his car, or his cargo. Pistol is tiny, aero-style, lightweight, the kind of gun the fashion designer will carry; It shoots teenage darts that fly at a speed five times the SR-71 spy plane, and when you get done with it, you have to plug it into the lighter because it runs on electricity. Deliverator never pulled that gun in anger, or in fear. He pulled it once to Gila Highlands. Some punks in Gila Highlands, the quirky Burbclave, wanted to deliver themselves, and they didn't want to pay for it. Thought they would impress Deliverator with a baseball bat. Deliverator pulled out a gun, centered on his laser doohickey on what was ready for the Louisville Slugger, fired. The recoil was enormous, as if the weapon had exploded in his hand. The middle third of the baseball bat turned into a column of burning sawdust, accelerating in all directions like a burst star. Punk ended up holding this bat handle with milk smoke pouring out the end. A stupid look took his face. Got nothing but trouble from Deliverator. Since then, Deliverator has kept the gun in the glove compartment and relied instead on a co-planted set of samurai swords that have always been his weapon of choice anyway. Punks in Gila Highlands were not afraid of a gun, so Deliverator was forced to use it. But swords don't need demonstrations. The Deliverator car has enough potential energy packed into its batteries to fire a pound of bacon into the asteroid belt. Unlike a bimbo box or a Burb beater, the Deliverator car unleashes this power through gaping, shiny, polished spinthers... Do you want to talk contact patches? Your car's tires have tiny contact spots, talk to asphalt in four places the size of a tongue. The Deliverator car has large sticky tires with contact spots the size of a fat lady's thigh. Deliverator is in contact with the road, starts as a bad day, stops at the peseta. As he scrunches to a halt, the electromechanical hatch on the flank of his car is already opening to reveal its empty pizza slots, the door tapping and folding back on itself like a wing beetle. Slots are waiting. Waiting for a hot pizza. From the Snow Crash, Neil Stevenson. Published by Bantam in 1992 Additional resources: More ideas and Technologies Neil Stevenson Tech news articles related to Snow Crash More ideas and Technologies Neil Stevenson Tech news articles related to the works of Neil Stevenson Deliverator Car Related News Articles: - Tribal Pizza Carpenter for Snow Crash Delivery Vehicles Articles Related to Gyro-X Self-Balancing Vehicle Ford SafeCap, opposite Niven and Barnes' Napcap Tesla Roadster Plus SpaceX Thrusters Equal Rocket Car Want to Contribute Item? It's simple: get the title of the subject, the quote, the title of the book and the author's name, and add it here. Excerpts from Neil Stevenson, Snow Crash (NY 1992) page 1-18Note: this excerpt appears here in accordance with the doctrine of fair use. It is solely for educational purposes by students at George Mason University in History 120 and cannot be reproduced or copied to any other website. Chapter One Liberation belongs to the elite order, the sacred subcategory. He's got an espyte. Now he is preparing to perform his third mission in a night. Its shape is black, like activated charcoal, filtering very light out of the air. The bullet will bounce off his arachnofiber weave like a wren hitting the patio door, but excess sweat is brought through like it a breeze through a freshly squeezed forest. Where his body has bony limbs, the suit is baked: feels like a gummy jelly, protects like a stack of phone books. When they gave him a job, they gave him a gun. Deliverator never deals with cash, but someone can come for it anyway, perhaps wanting his car, or his cargo. Pistol is tiny, aero-style, lightweight, the kind of gun the fashion designer will carry; It shoots teenage darts that fly at a speed five times the SR-71 spy plane, and when you get done with it, you have to plug it into the lighter because it runs on electricity. Deliverator never pulled that gun in anger, or in fear. He pulled it once to Gila Highlands. Some punks in Gila Highlands, the quirky Burbclave, wanted to deliver themselves, and they didn't want to pay for it. Thought they would impress Deliverator with a baseball bat. Deliverator pulled out a gun, centered on his laser doohickey on what was ready for the Louisville Slugger, fired. The recoil was enormous, as if the weapon had exploded in his hand. The middle third of the baseball bat turned into a column of burning sawdust, accelerating in all directions like a burst star. Punk ended up holding this bat handle with milk smoke pouring out the end. A stupid look took his face. Got nothing but trouble from Deliverator. Since then, Deliverator has kept the gun in the glove compartment and relied instead on a co-planted set of samurai swords that have always been his weapon of choice anyway. Punks in Gila Highlands were not afraid of a gun, so Deliverator was forced to use it. But swords don't need demonstrations. The Deliverator car has enough potential energy packed into its batteries to fire a pound of bacon into the asteroid belt. Unlike a bimbo box or a Burb beater, the Deliverator car unleashes this power through gaping, shiny, polished spinthers... Do you want to talk contact patches? Your car's tires have tiny contact spots, talk to asphalt in four places the size of a tongue. The Deliverator car has large sticky tires with contact spots the size of a fat lady's thigh. Deliverator is in contact with the road, starts as a bad day, stops at the peseta. As he scrunches to a halt, the electromechanical hatch on the flank of his car is already opening to reveal its empty pizza slots, the door tapping and folding back on itself like a wing beetle. Slots are waiting. Waiting for a hot pizza. From the Snow Crash, Neil Stevenson. Published by Bantam in 1992 Additional resources: More ideas and Technologies Neil Stevenson Tech news articles related to Snow Crash More ideas and Technologies Neil Stevenson Tech news articles related to the works of Neil Stevenson Deliverator Car Related News Articles: - Tribal Pizza Carpenter for Snow Crash Delivery Vehicles Articles Related to Gyro-X Self-Balancing Vehicle Ford SafeCap, opposite Niven and Barnes' Napcap Tesla Roadster Plus SpaceX Thrusters Equal Rocket Car Want to Contribute Item? It's simple: get the title of the subject, the quote, the title of the book and the author's name, and add it here. Excerpts from Neil Stevenson, Snow Crash (NY 1992) page 1-18Note: this excerpt appears here in accordance with the doctrine of fair use. It is solely for educational purposes by students at George Mason University in History 120 and cannot be reproduced or copied to any other website. Chapter One Liberation belongs to the elite order, the sacred subcategory. He's got an espyte. Now he is preparing to perform his third mission in a night. Its shape is black, like activated charcoal, filtering very light out of the air. The bullet will bounce off his arachnofiber weave like a wren hitting the patio door, but excess sweat is brought through like it a breeze through a freshly squeezed forest. Where his body has bony limbs, the suit is baked: feels like a gummy jelly, protects like a stack of phone books. When they gave him a job, they gave him a gun. Deliverator never deals with cash, but someone can come for it anyway, perhaps wanting his car, or his cargo. Pistol is tiny, aero-style, lightweight, the kind of gun the fashion designer will carry; It shoots teenage darts that fly at a speed five times the SR-71 spy plane, and when you get done with it, you have to plug it into the lighter because it runs on electricity. Deliverator never pulled that gun in anger, or in fear. He pulled it once to Gila Highlands. Some punks in Gila Highlands, the quirky Burbclave, wanted to deliver themselves, and they didn't want to pay for it. Thought they would impress Deliverator with a baseball bat. Deliverator pulled out a gun, centered on his laser doohickey on what was ready for the Louisville Slugger, fired. The recoil was enormous, as if the weapon had exploded in his hand. The middle third of the baseball bat turned into a column of burning sawdust, accelerating in all directions like a burst star. Punk ended up holding this bat handle with milk smoke pouring out the end. A stupid look took his face. Got nothing but trouble from Deliverator. Since then, Deliverator has kept the gun in the glove compartment and relied instead on a co-planted set of samurai swords that have always been his weapon of choice anyway. Punks in Gila Highlands were not afraid of a gun, so Deliverator was forced to use it. But swords don't need demonstrations. The Deliverator car has enough potential energy packed into its batteries to fire a pound of bacon into the asteroid belt. Unlike a bimbo box or a Burb beater, the Deliverator car unleashes this power through gaping, shiny, polished spinthers... Do you want to talk contact patches? Your car's tires have tiny contact spots, talk to asphalt in four places the size of a tongue. The Deliverator car has large sticky tires with contact spots the size of a fat lady's thigh. Deliverator is in contact with the road, starts as a bad day, stops at the peseta. As he scrunches to a halt, the electromechanical hatch on the flank of his car is already opening to reveal its empty pizza slots, the door tapping and folding back on itself like a wing beetle. Slots are waiting. Waiting for a hot pizza. From the Snow Crash, Neil Stevenson. Published by Bantam in 1992 Additional resources: More ideas and Technologies Neil Stevenson Tech news articles related to Snow Crash More ideas and Technologies Neil Stevenson Tech news articles related to the works of Neil Stevenson Deliverator Car Related News Articles: - Tribal Pizza Carpenter for Snow Crash Delivery Vehicles Articles Related to Gyro-X Self-Balancing Vehicle Ford SafeCap, opposite Niven and Barnes' Napcap Tesla Roadster Plus SpaceX Thrusters Equal Rocket Car Want to Contribute Item? It's simple: get the title of the subject, the quote, the title of the book and the author's name, and add it here. Excerpts from Neil Stevenson, Snow Crash (NY 1992) page 1-18Note: this excerpt appears here in accordance with the doctrine of fair use. It is solely for educational purposes by students at George Mason University in History 120 and cannot be reproduced or copied to any other website. Chapter One Liberation belongs to the elite order, the sacred subcategory. He's got an espyte. Now he is preparing to perform his third mission in a night. Its shape is black, like activated charcoal, filtering very light out of the air. The bullet will bounce off his arachnofiber weave like a wren hitting the patio door, but excess sweat is brought through like it a breeze through a freshly squeezed forest. Where his body has bony limbs, the suit is baked: feels like a gummy jelly, protects like a stack of phone books. When they gave him a job, they gave him a gun. Deliverator never deals with cash, but someone can come for it anyway, perhaps wanting his car, or his cargo. Pistol is tiny, aero-style, lightweight, the kind of gun the fashion designer will carry; It shoots teenage darts that fly at a speed five times the SR-71 spy plane, and when you get done with it, you have to plug it into the lighter because it runs on electricity. Deliverator never pulled that gun in anger, or in fear. He pulled it once to Gila Highlands. Some punks in Gila Highlands, the quirky Burbclave, wanted to deliver themselves, and they didn't want to pay for it. Thought they would impress Deliverator with a baseball bat. Deliverator pulled out a gun, centered on his laser doohickey on what was ready for the Louisville Slugger, fired. The recoil was enormous, as if the weapon had exploded in his hand. The middle third of the baseball bat turned into a column of burning sawdust, accelerating in all directions like a burst star. Punk ended up holding this bat handle with milk smoke pouring out the end. A stupid look took his face. Got nothing but trouble from Deliverator. Since then, Deliverator has kept the gun in the glove compartment and relied instead on a co-planted set of samurai swords that have always been his weapon of choice anyway. Punks in Gila Highlands were not afraid of a gun, so Deliverator was forced to use it. But swords don't need demonstrations. The Deliverator car has enough potential energy packed into its batteries to fire a pound of bacon into the asteroid belt. Unlike a bimbo box or a Burb beater, the Deliverator car unleashes this power through gaping, shiny, polished spinthers... Do you want to talk contact patches? Your car's tires have tiny contact spots, talk to asphalt in four places the size of a tongue. The Deliverator car has large sticky tires with contact spots the size of a fat lady's thigh. Deliverator is in contact with the road, starts as a bad day, stops at the peseta. As he scrunches to a halt, the electromechanical hatch on the flank of his car is already opening to reveal its empty pizza slots, the door tapping and folding back on itself like a wing beetle. Slots are waiting. Waiting for a hot pizza. From the Snow Crash, Neil Stevenson. Published by Bantam in 1992 Additional resources: More ideas and Technologies Neil Stevenson Tech news articles related to Snow Crash More ideas and Technologies Neil Stevenson Tech news articles related to the works of Neil Stevenson Deliverator Car Related News Articles: - Tribal Pizza Carpenter for Snow Crash Delivery Vehicles Articles Related to Gyro-X Self-Balancing Vehicle Ford SafeCap, opposite Niven and Barnes' Napcap Tesla Roadster Plus SpaceX Thrusters Equal Rocket Car Want to Contribute Item? It's simple: get the title of the subject, the quote, the title of the book and the author's name, and add it here. Excerpts from Neil Stevenson, Snow Crash (NY 1992) page 1-18Note: this excerpt appears here in accordance with the doctrine of fair use. It is solely for educational purposes by students at George Mason University in History 120 and cannot be reproduced or copied to any other website. Chapter One Liberation belongs to the elite order, the sacred subcategory. He's got an espyte. Now he is preparing to perform his third mission in a night. Its shape is black, like activated charcoal, filtering very light out of the air. The bullet will bounce off his arachnofiber weave like a wren hitting the patio door, but excess sweat is brought through like it a breeze through a freshly squeezed forest. Where his body has bony limbs, the suit is baked: feels like a gummy jelly, protects like a stack of phone books. When they gave him a job, they gave him a gun. Deliverator never deals with cash, but someone can come for it anyway, perhaps wanting his car, or his cargo. Pistol is tiny, aero-style, lightweight, the kind of gun the fashion designer will carry; It shoots teenage darts that fly at a speed five times the SR-71 spy plane, and when you get done with it, you have to plug it into the lighter because it runs on electricity. Deliverator never pulled that gun in anger, or in fear. He pulled it once to Gila Highlands. Some punks in Gila Highlands, the quirky Burbclave, wanted to deliver themselves, and they didn't want to pay for it. Thought they would impress Deliverator with a baseball bat. Deliverator pulled out a gun, centered on his laser doohickey on what was ready for the Louisville Slugger, fired. The recoil was enormous, as if the weapon had exploded in his hand. The middle third of the baseball bat turned into a column of burning sawdust, accelerating in all directions like a burst star. Punk ended up holding this bat handle with milk smoke pouring out the end. A stupid look took his face. Got nothing but trouble from Deliverator. Since then, Deliverator has kept the gun in the glove compartment and relied instead on a co-planted set of samurai swords that have always been his weapon of choice anyway. Punks in Gila Highlands were not afraid of a gun, so Deliverator was forced to use it. But swords don't need demonstrations. The Deliverator car has enough potential energy packed into its batteries to fire a pound of bacon into the asteroid belt. Unlike a bimbo box or a Burb beater, the Deliverator car unleashes this power through gaping, shiny, polished spinthers... Do you want to talk contact patches? Your car's tires have tiny contact spots, talk to asphalt in four places the size of a tongue. The Deliverator car has large sticky tires with contact spots the size of a fat lady's thigh. Deliverator is in contact with the road, starts as a bad day, stops at the peseta. As he scrunches to a halt, the electromechanical hatch on the flank of his car is already opening to reveal its empty pizza slots, the door tapping and folding back on itself like a wing beetle. Slots are waiting. Waiting for a hot pizza. From the Snow Crash, Neil Stevenson. Published by Bantam in 1992 Additional resources: More ideas and Technologies Neil Stevenson Tech news articles related to Snow Crash More ideas and Technologies Neil Stevenson Tech news articles related to the works of Neil Stevenson Deliverator Car Related News Articles: - Tribal Pizza Carpenter for Snow Crash Delivery Vehicles Articles Related to Gyro-X Self-Balancing Vehicle Ford SafeCap, opposite Niven and Barnes' Napcap Tesla Roadster Plus SpaceX Thrusters Equal Rocket Car Want to Contribute Item? It's simple: get the title of the subject, the quote, the title of the book and the author's name, and add it here. Excerpts from Neil Stevenson, Snow Crash (NY 1992) page 1-18Note: this excerpt appears here in accordance with the doctrine of fair use. It is solely for educational purposes by students at George Mason University in History 120 and cannot be reproduced or copied to any other website. Chapter One Liberation belongs to the elite order, the sacred subcategory. He's got an espyte. Now he is preparing to perform his third mission in a night. Its shape is black, like activated charcoal, filtering very light out of